Sending anything other than documents via a courier service will still require that you prepare a pro-forma shipping invoice. You will need to keep track of courier shipments just as you do all others, especially on temporary exports that will re-enter the U.S. If something is sent into Mexico via courier on an emergency basis after hours, it does not necessarily have to go back the same way. You can transport it back into the U.S. with other returning goods but will need a copy of the documentation (pedimento) it entered Mexico with. You should be able to get a copies of pedimentos (or the pedimento numbers at the very least) from your courier company contact.
